A Nottingham student has scooped £2,000 for winning a national fashion competition with her hand-made designs.

Terri Cohen, a third year Nottingham Trent student, also won a work placement with Harrods in the prestigious Graduate Competition held by the educational fashion charity Fashion Awareness Direct.

She had to create two different Egyptian-inspired outfits - one representing her personality and another using architecturally influenced patterns.

Her tutor Gilly Staples said: "Terri's a fantastically talented, motivated and hard working individual. She's always pushing herself to achieve the best and we're all really proud of her."
